AFTER ENLIGHTENMENT, WHAT?

by Tara

THE TANTRA OF TEACHING

The guru enters into the fray
The better to Enlighten.
Mixing in humanity
One needs to get 'inside' them.
(Least work and play beside them.)

How else 'to know', but feel their plight
To share the burden, bestow light?
Its taint oneself or stand idly by.

The guru is a sacrifice;
There's little to do about it.
Knowing his light is darkened in their fight,
They'll not hesitate to judge him,
Or heedlessly abandon.

Still, he must take it in good cheer
Equanimity enfolding,
Certain all will 'come out in the wash'
The light will ever uphold him.

A thought of the day in passing . . .

The way is the goal.

On this days except from AFTER ENLIGHTENMENT, WHAT? . . .

One's soul will be upheld in the end certainly, but not necessarily the ego-personality. This is a subtle and important distinction about the life after Enlightenment.

Truth is, a full Enlightenment is a new beginning, and while putting it into practice seems the obvious next step and teaching it the third; there will generally, be fresh learning in all aspects and levels of one's being no matter what one does after. So, some may choose not 'bringing it back' nor putting it into practice, neither teaching it; but rather save such for another life and 'sit it out' for the remainder of this one, or make some different choice . . .

Sometimes . . . it's not about the life.

After a full Enlightenment the essential fact is: one gets to choose and create, whereas prior to it, such was minimal, if at all.
